2020-07-17

(Gilbert, AZ)...Rivulet Films announces director Michael Berry to direct a new TV series Avenue of the Americas. Michael Berry's director credits include TV Series, Chicago Med and feature films Frontera and Stuck. Mike Witherill will produce the series and is known for his work as a producer in the films John Wick & Drinking Buddies.

Avenue of the Americas is a television dramatic series based on historical fiction placing one family in the center of historic events, along with the leaders of that time, from the American Revolutionary War, American Civil War and World War I, to navigate the fight for civil rights.

“We are excited to announce Michael Berry as director on Avenue of the Americas. It is our third project together and we always value the unique insight he brings to each project. Avenue of the Americas stands to be the first series in an ever expanding historical fiction collection that tells the iconic storylines of the most famous streets in America, think ‘Boardwalk Empire’ meets ‘Downtown Abbey,’ shares Aaron Klusman, CEO,.

“I was intrigued and excited to work on this project the moment I heard about it. Pete Rosen’s brilliant concept of following these same characters throughout history as they experience and adjust to the need, politics, business and culture that surrounds the history of the business of guns is beyond fascinating. For better and sometimes worse, America has long identified with and romanticized as a gun culture. In Avenue of the Americas, I see the opportunity to explore the history and drama on both sides of this very difficult and divisive issue,” states Michael Berry, Director.
